

Designs take an artful turn

MICHELLE MADHOK

is a shopping expert and the founder of SheFinds.com. She writes a weekly e-mail packed with beauty and fashion finds.

There's no need to go to the gallery to pick up new artwork. More artists are using apparel and accessories as their medium.

Louis Vuitton's partnership with Japanese artist Takashi Murakami blossoms once again this spring with the new line Monogram Cerises. The traditional Vuitton bags are dotted with juicy-red, smiling cherries. Red canvas lining punches up the fun and is further accented by red top-stitching.

With a background in painting and design, Molly Dilworth's latest canvas is super-soft jersey knit. Her cap sleeve, 3/4-length and long-sleeve tees feature original, embroidered designs of people and landscapes. You may be the first on the block to own one of these originals, but with their handmade look and great fit you certainly won't be the last.

Jillian Sherry's dream was to combine fine art and lingerie to create a unique style. Now she hand-paints classic artistic designs onto quality silk undergarments. Her lingerie is signed and numbered, and each piece is sewn to your exact measurements. Of course, limited editions don't come cheap—camisoles start at $950.

With an MFA in graphic design, an eye for style and a fascination with color, Kirsten Goede started making jewelry to accessorize her wardrobe. When her sparkly bracelets garnered tons of compliments, she started taking orders. Now Objets d'Envy is a thriving business. Her Swarovski crystal pieces come in nine spectacular colors. They can dress up your downtown jeans or glamorize a flirty cocktail dress.

If you're looking for a wearable masterpiece for your munchkin, dress your little one in the latest creations from Los Angeles designer Jeffrey Kelly. All of Jeeto's 100 percent cotton one-pieces and tees sport designs based on Kelly's original fine art and come in sizes from newborn to six years old. Select from 20 one-of-a-kind designs available in four different colors.

Visit www.blog.shefinds.com for links to buy these pieces and some special deals for Metro readers. Sign up for the SheFinds newsletter at www.shefinds.com for more style finds.